

BIOGRAPHY OF ROBIN HARDING

Robin Harding is Tokyo Bureau chief for the Financial Times. Established in 1888, the FT is one of the world's leading news organizations, especially for economic and financial news.

The FT is recognized internationally for its authority, integrity and accuracy. It is part of Nikkei Inc., which provides a broad range of information, news and services for the global business community.

In his current role, Harding's reporting focuses on Japan's economy, politics and international relations. Robin was the FT's US economics editor from 2010-2014, based in Washington DC, where he covered all aspects of the US and international economy, from the Federal Reserve to the IMF. He has also worked as a member of the FT's editorial board and contributes occasional columns on economics to the paper's opinion page.

Robin was born in Durham, in the north of England, and has a degree in economics from the University of Cambridge. From 2001 to 2004, studied at Hitotsubashi University in Tokyo on a Monbukagakusho Scholarship, where he received a master's degree. Before becoming a journalist, he worked in banking, asset management and public policy research.
